

I am opposed to the proposed changes in broadcast ownership laws that will be be put to a vote of the commission on Monday. These changes will only benefit the large powerhouse broadcasters who have a significant stake in the outcome of this vote. In no way will the proposed changes benefit the public, to which the FCC presumably owes its fiduciary responsibility. To allow the few to benefit at the expense of the public would be a clear violation of the public's trust in the commission. Please vote to maintain the current ownership rules. If truly needed, and in the best interest of the public, the FCC should consider alternative compromise actions that may benefit broadcasters but not at the expense of the public's demand for competition and diversity in broadcasting.
